This woman is speaking all over the country, but this is her only talk in our area. Don't miss this chance to hear what the fracking industry is trying desperately to hide.

When Ms. Rogers first reported that the natural gas industry's reporting and their figures didn't jibe, they tried to discredit her. Latest information confirms her findings. How does this impact our state? Our energy future? Our economy? Global warming?

What Arkansas can learn from the saga of North Carolina

Event in Fayetteville Kicks Off Statewide Tour
Oct. 25, 6-8 p.m. St. Paul's Parish Hall 224 N. East Ave.

The Buffalo River Watershed Alliance (BRWA) hopes our state can learn from the swine saga in North Carolina before it is too late in Arkansas. BRWA will host a presentation by Waterkeeper Rick Dove Oct. 25, 6-8 p.m. at St. Paul's Parish Hall 224 N. East Avenue in Fayetteville. Refreshments provided. Fayetteville is the first stop in a tour that includes Little Rock, Mt. Home, Harrison Jasper and Eureka Springs and Yellville.

Thanks to the work of Dove, citizen activists, and the Waterkeeper Alliance the state of North Carolina officially banned the building of new hog facilities that use the open waste pits and spraying methods. New hog facilities can be built in North Carolina if they use the required, more environmentally friendly technologies, which have eliminated open waste pits and spraying. That is not the case in Arkansas. The swine confined feeding operation (CAFO) that has been built in the Buffalo River Watershed is still allowed by Arkansas law to use this open pit or lagoon method.
