Afternoon at the Movies
“Where Do We Go Now?”

We watched one you'll want on your viewing list too. Lebanon has struggled through long civil wars. This brilliant story by Lebanese filmmaker Nadine Labaki explores several complex parts of the violence that engulfed Lebanon, and continues to explode in many part of the world.

Issues between women and men, Muslim and Christian, modern vs tradition, and the sad impacts of violence are all addressed in a sweet and tightly woven story filled with wonderful characters, humor, pathos and redemption. Watch it if you can.
"In order to close the gender gap, it is not enough to adopt the gender lens.” - ActionAid International's Alberta Guerra

Observers of FAO's work on gender argue that the organisation has made very good progress over the past years, and that the basic necessary documents and normative frameworks needed for closing the gender gap are now in place. But care must now be paid to implementation.....
